

The FCC is going too far with their fines to radio guru's. It is always American's who point the finger rather than accept their own faults; meaning, if a concerned parent complains about their child hearing an "adult" radio program, isn't it the parents obligation to change the channel? Why complain to a federal agency for a radio show they obviously accept. If the Janet controversy had not happened, we wouldn't have angry parents blaming their faulty parenting on said radio programs. As an Orlando area listener, I lost 2 morning shows I listen to on a regular basis: Bubba the Love Sponge, and Howard Stern.
